About

Annabelle Knight, M.Ed, is Founder, Director and Lead Educator of Forest School. She is a passionate early childhood educator, anti-bias advocate and environmentalist. She loves spending time with children observing and learning from their unique perspectives and curiosity.

Why a Forest School?

At our program, children will . . .

- have fun!
- benefit from low staff:child ratios
- be supported to learn through play
- enjoy bilingual songs and vocabulary
- develop creativity, confidence and lasting connections to the natural world
- be well prepared for future relationships and learning

The natural world presents a huge variety of learning opportunities, health and wellness benefits.

We designed our program with the knowledge that children are healthier in the long-term, more able to learn and better able to self-regulate when their entire bodies are actively engaged and in control of their work.

Philosophy

Forest School believes in child-centered, inquiry and play-based philosophies. We believe children's innate curiosity provides meaningful context for learning and outdoor immersion inspires imagination and creativity. We develop critical thinking and problem-solving skills to promote social and environmental responsibility.

Our guiding principles are:

- Nature provides an ideal context for learning and development
- Child-led play inspires imagination, creativity, and curiosity
- Children are competent, capable, and resilient
- Families and educators are partners in children's learning

Our Mission

Forest School offers a high-quality early childhood environmental education program that nurtures children's holistic development and lasting connections with nature.

We support a diverse and inclusive community of children and families who respect and care for themselves, each other, and the Earth.
